Brief history

Josephus mentions Absalom's Monument in Antiquities 7,10,3. However, this impressive tomb in the Kidron Valley known as Absalom's Tomb actually has nothing to do with David's rebellious son Absalom. It acquired this moniker before scholars could actually date it, based upon the reference to Absalom's Pillar or Place in 2 Samuel 18.

Over the years there developed a custom in Jerusalem for fathers to bring their rebellious sons to Absalom's Tomb to throw stones at the monument to the boy who lifted his hand against his father.

The structure actually dates to the Herodian period approximately 1,000 years after Absalom's death. These Herodian Tombs are referred to as “Second Temple Tombs”.

To the left of Absalom's Tomb is an eight chambered catacomb that appears to have been cut at the same time as Absalom's Tomb. Because of this, another theory is that the so-called Absalom's Pillar acted as a monument for the catacomb that was named the Cave of Jehoshaphat. Based upon the style, these tombs have been ascribed to the early part of the 1st century A.D., when Jesus may well have witnessed their construction.

In the Byzantine period monks commemorated Bible stories by writing inscriptions on the old tombs in the Kidron Valley. There is a 4th century inscription which reads “This is the tomb of Zachariah, the martyr, the holy priest, the father of John.” Another inscription was found on the Monument stating it was the Tomb of Simeon the “just and devout” - Scriptural character of Luke 2.
